Story Outline

No matter they are desserts eaten off a lavish silver platter or bargain delicacies from a roadside stall, all consumed food turns into little poo-men in the end. At the flush of a toilet, little poo-men embark on a thrilling, epic adventure through labyrinths of septic tanks and sewers.

After countless days of dwelling in the sewers, our faecal fraternity becomes one with its surroundings, swimming freely in its natural habitat. Between the newbies and old-timers, our poo-tagonist Excreman stands out with his striking personality, sometimes following the crowd while enjoying himself at other moments. He is a whimsical soul overflowing with outlandish ideas. One day, Excreman creates a unique pink flower out of toilet paper. It is met with disdain by others, except Sister Poo, who embraces him – for to her, every drop of poo is one of a kind. Suddenly, a forceful torrent of fart blasts through the sewers, scattering the poo in all directions. While adrift, they even encounter a poo-werful cleaning squad! To save her companions, Sister Poo sacrifices herself. Driven by the spirit of selfless love, Excreman leads a pack of little poo-men on a quest to conquer perilous waves and fulfil their destiny, landing in and nurturing a field of radiant, fragrant roses.

From Page to Stage, our Excreman

An Interview with Choreographer and Director Yuri Ng

A: This idea originated from my collaboration with Hong Kong Sinfonietta in 2014, where I was a vocal performer for their production McDull · A Sentimental Little Christmas. Among all its stories, The Excreman triggered me to contemplate the value of life. Think about it: when a piece of poo is broken down, it disintegrated, restructured, and converted into other forms. Have we ever thought about what happens to a piece of poo after it is flushed away? That's what fascinates me the most about this grand adventure of Excreman.

WHEN A POO WOOS

Q: What changes have you made to the work in adapting it from a picture book to the stage?

A: I love fairy tales, or more specifically picture books, because they spark our imagination. This is also precisely the magical appeal of theatre. From picture book to the stage, with the story of The Excreman as the starting point, I personified different pieces of poo by having them meet in a toilet out of fate, each of them with different origins and experiences. No matter what kind of food they were born from, they have all gathered in the same form as 'poo' in this toilet. I think subconsciously, that also aligns with how I view the human body. Regardless of our identity, where we are from, and what we've done, all of us become one and the same when we are returned to earth as soil. Back to the performance, it also doesn't matter what roles the dancers have played before and what experiences they have had - be a loach, seagull, little poo-men, or old poo-men. On the stage, everyone bonds together as one and the same.

This presentation of the work can be viewed as a three-dimensional picture book. The world of animation brings us boundless imagination, while on the stage, we combine animation and the human body into one. So how does a fantasy differ when it is portrayed through the human body instead of animation? What kind of a space is created when both are combined together? And what sort of imagination is conjured between the stills and motion of animation, and from one theatrical scene to another? Our key theme lies in breaking free of 'gravity', in that how our dancers turn into light smoke and drift along in an imaginative world. All these we leave for you to discover in our production.

— An Interview with Choreographer and Director Yuri Ng

- Q: What feelings do you hope adult and children audiences will walk away with after watching When a Poo Woos?
- A: I hope that after watching When a Poo Woos, they can be reminded of the first time they saw The Excreman. What experience did they have? Who did they see it with? How do they feel now that they've watched it again?

WHEN A POO WOOS

Of course, many children may be watching it for the first time. How can this word, which is commonly viewed as vulgar and taboo, be transformed into a source of inspiration in everyday life? To me, the dancing body is fascinating, and I hope that through a medium of performance such as dance theatre, they can be inspired to explore their interest in bodily motion and expand their imagination about this world.

So in the end, it all comes back to the imagination!

- Q: Anything else you would like to share with the audience?
- A: "Why do we have so many stereotypes?"

Everyone stays away from poo because it's smelly. How about when it comes to people? Would we exclude someone or even belittle them? Everyone has their value, and I hope we don't look down on others. Even rubbish and poo have their uses as well. To me, life is fluid, and to give away a bit of the story: in the end, all the 'poo' turns into soil and sustenance that nurture a bed of roses, with their fragrance symbolising the transformation of life. Especially with this being a family-friendly show, what kind of a world do we hope to build for and from the viewpoint of our future generations?

Co-choreographers and Rehearsal Coaches' Q&A

---- Noel PONG

- Q: As co-choreographer and rehearsal coach, what are your ideas on contemporary dance training?
- A: All styles should be taken seriously, none are just 'for fun'. You are required to have basic training in modern dance. You can't say "it's my own style", and just do any movement they want.
- Q: What qualities do young dancers have?
- A: Passion, drive and ambition.
- Q: Was there anything memorable or surprising moment during the rehearsal of When a Poo Woos?
- A: Working out the scene of 'Detergent' with the team members of 'Dance Training and Performance Practice Programme'.

Co-choreographers and Rehearsal Coaches' Q&A

—— Peggy LAM

- WHEN A POO WOOS
- Q: What do you focus on when choreographing children?
- A: I pay special attention to making the movements textured. I intentionally use subtext to help them get into character and connect their hearts with their bodies so they become one, helping them to express more things so that they can perform better.
- Q: What have you learnt from working with children?
- A: Happiness is simplicity.
- Q: Was there anything memorable or surprising moment during the rehearsal of When a Poo Woos?
- A: I'll never forget when the whole class called out "Miss Peggy, buy us bubble tea!" Haha! Of course, there were interesting moments during rehearsal. There were parts where they didn't use the beat but their mutual sense of understanding and trust with each other. During rehearsals, any hesitation means you'll lose the sense of trust and security. I try different techniques to help them communicate with each other and understand their difficulties. I'm also really moved by seeing how they've progressed step by step and how they use 200% of their concentration when they practice.
- Q: Please share a thing or an experience you think is the biggest 'poo' (failure). How did you face and overcome it?
- A: I've gradually begun to understand the saying "Failure is the secret to success". The word 'failure' sounds rather negative, but slowly I'm becoming more comfortable with accepting my failures.

I've been asking myself the following questions:

- Do I believe that there are always failures and setbacks in life?
- Do I believe that the older I get, then the more failures I experience or are involved with?
- Do I believe that progress only comes with failure?
- How would I encourage someone like a little baby to stand up and walk?

Trying to accept my failures, be kinder to myself, and to make successes out of my countless failures, is perhaps my 'philosophy of failure' now!

Rehearsal Coach's Q&A

---- Ronly KONG

- Q: Can you share with us how you helped the students understand what was needed during rehearsals?
- A: We start rehearsals with me doing the warm up with the students. Then Yuri will lead the rehearsal, demonstrating and explaining what they need to do; while I'm mainly off to the side watching them, occasionally helping them to break down the movements. When the choreography is over, I adjust students' movement based on how they looked emotionally and physically during the rehearsal, to ensure that everyone not only understands the sequence of movements, but also don't forget the meaning and emotions behind them. I also ask them to focus on their performance, pay attention to the space and the music and be aware of the other performers.
- Q: What changes have you observed among the students from 2021 'Dance Research & Development Platform: Exploring Movement-image' to today's stage performance? Can you share some of their learning experiences?
- A: During the planning stage, we held basic training, improvisation, and group work with the students for team building and fostering creativity. During this stage version, in addition to applying the skills they had learned earlier, there has also been room for them to express their individual creativity, giving them a chance to show off more of their skills. During this time, they've been able to give each other feedback, appreciation, and correct each other's work. The quality of their work has been amazing!
- Q: What's been interesting or memorable about this year's rehearsals?
- A: Most memorable for me was when Yuri arranged for Eric to learn all the 'CCDC Junior' students' parts, and selecting individual moves, linking them together by adding Eric's unique interpretation, and transform them into 'their own flow'. When Eric taught the Juniors this, they didn't know these moves came from them until Eric told them. It's such a surprise when their individual personalities are incorporated into a creationa very valuable and meaningful exchange! Allowing the Juniors and dance artists to create and learn from each other was a valuable experience for both of them.
- Q: Please share a thing or an experience you think is the biggest 'poo' (failure). How did you face and overcome it?
- A: I only passed three subjects in my Form 5 exams Chinese, English and Mathametics. When I didn't know what to do, my school allowed me to go back and repeat Form 5. That time I studied hard and I passed everything.

Rehearsal Mistress's Q&A

- Q: What is 'Rehearsal Mistress' in a dance company? Can you share what kind of work this role entails?
- A: For me, a rehearsal mistress is a kind of 'chore'. It entails "looking at the overall picture and paying attention to detail." You also have to act as a bridge between the choreographer and the dancers, finding the best ways to communicate because everyone is different. That's a lot to learn, and I'm still learning!
- Q: Please share a thing or an experience you think is the biggest 'poo' (failure). How did you face and overcome it?
- A: I don't believe there is such a thing as one's 'biggest failure' in life, there are only times when we didn't do something well enough, or we didn't give it our best shot. If I have to say one thing, my 'biggest failure' would be putting on stage make-up for my first performance when I was a kid. Haha! At the time I thought I looked really beautiful, but looking back on it now, it's embarrassing... But as time passes, we can all look back on our 'biggest failure' and see it has become our funniest memory. Perhaps we shouldn't focus too much on "failure", because with the passage of time, well-established concepts take on new possibilities.

Please share a thing or an experience you think is your biggest 'poo' (failure). How did you face and overcome it?

By CCDC Dance Artists

Got up in the morning, washed and got the bus to school. When I arrived on time and sit down, I waked up in the real life, realized that what I 'did' before was a dream.

This is how I cope: Don't speak about this to anyone else, just get up and go back to school as usual.

—— Eric KWONG as Waiter / Excreman

The 'poo-est' experience I had was during a BBQ with relatives. When we feel bored, me and my cousins spontaneously started to play leapfrog on the stairs. However, I was the only one who were unsuccessfully to do so and got hurt eventually, I was the 'poo-est' one.

——Brian YAM as Waiter / Sister Poo

The 'poo-est' experience I had was during a theatre performance when I was a student. At a crucial point, the props that were needed went missing, so I had to use my hands to pretend that the props were there. I felt so complicated at that moment.

—— Felix KE as Waiter / Arishiittotle

Event: Leaving the house with my flies undone.

Solution: Do my zip up.

——Simpson YAU as Waiter / Shiittarroo San

Please share a thing or an experience you think is your biggest 'poo' (failure). How did you face and overcome it?

By CCDC Dance Artists

When I was young, I accidentally chipped one of my teeth while eating bread. The dentist found that I had a cavity. Since then, I've always gone for a dental check-up every year.

——Suyi HON as Waitress / Snoopeepee

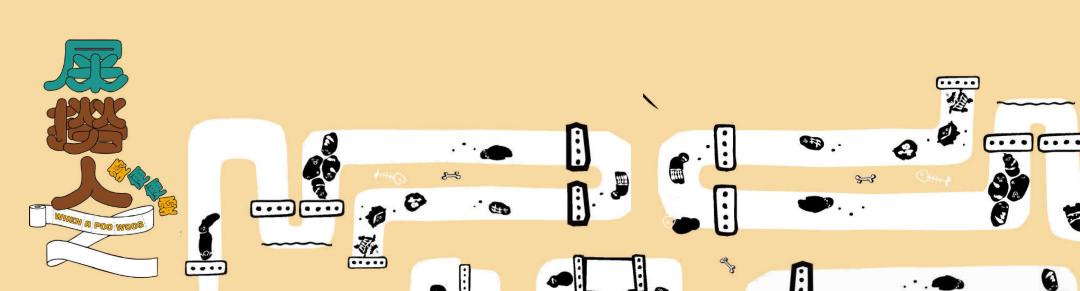

When I remembered there was something I needed to do at a certain place, but when I got there, I couldn't remember what I wanted to do.

Solutions: Let it go, don't force yourself to try to think about the answer. If you don't force it, then it will come to you eventually.

——Natalie KO as Waitress / Einshiitteiin

When I think about 'poo', the first thing that comes to mind is mathematics. When I was a kid, I would always get 'poo' results in tests because I was really, really, really bad at it. Until this year, I saw a film where the main character said, "I'm really bad at mathematics because it's just too precise." Suddenly, I had found an excuse to get rid of this 'poo'. Ha-ha! Maybe the reason I can't learn it is that I'm stuck on getting the mathematical formula absolutely right, doing repeated and meticulous measurements to get the only solution; while in life I've always relished moments of imprecision, instability and unpredictability. It's like people answering questions, everyone always has their own answers, even if they're not right, and as for me now, I'm always surprised, so I'm not afraid of 'poo'.

——Nini WANG as Lady Shitephanie N.

What kind of 'rubbish' are you most reluctant to throw away?

By 'Dance Training and Performance Practice Programme' members

I like to keep the red packets that my older relatives gave me for my birthday. I usually throw away or recycle the red envelopes I get for Spring Festival, but I kept these, with the year, greeting and my name written on them, in my drawer.

— Jody AU YEUNG as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

Things from the past like gifts I've been given, letters I haven't sent yet, things I haven't finished making... they're all memories of my past. Although they'll never come back, I can still remember those times. It's a shame to throw away this kind of 'rubbish'!

What kind of 'rubbish' are you most reluctant to throw away?

By 'Dance Training and Performance Practice Programme' members

I can't bear to throw away Stamps. Even though I can't use them anymore, they have great sentimental value.

They remind me of the time I spent travelling to other countries, the people I met and the knowledge that I gained there.

—— Gladys LEE as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

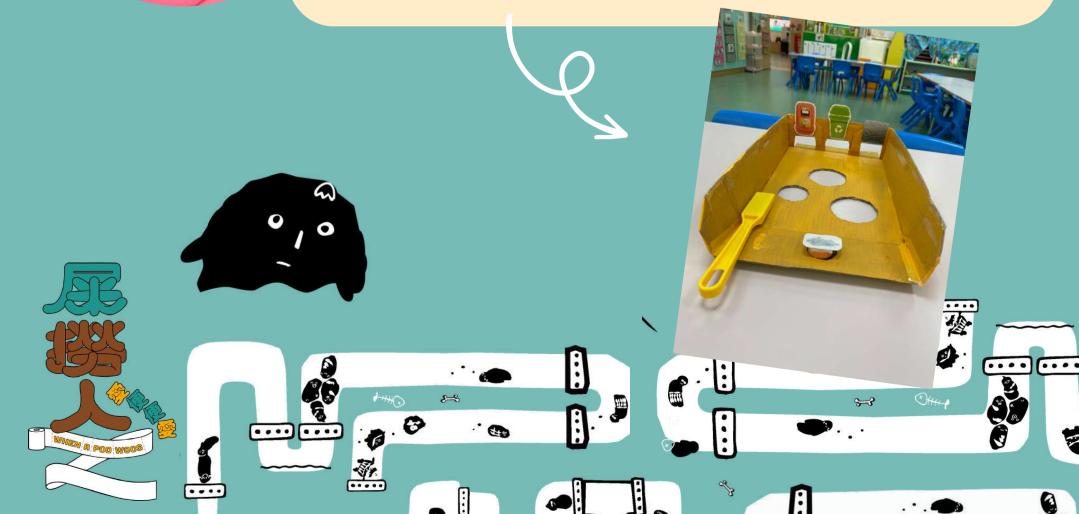

Pretty glass bottles! Some have such elegant printing or a really cool shape, so I washed them and then putted them on display in my room. Sometimes I won't buy a drink because I can't bear to throw the bottle away. As well as all the alcohol bottles on display in my house, there's a box of bottled skin care products stashed under my bed.

—— Manson LEUNG as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

I can't bear to throw away the teaching aid I made during my internship. It took me ages to make. I designed it especially with holes to make it more fun. But I had made the holes too big, and when the kids were playing with it, things would keep dropping through onto the table and they couldn't reach them. So, in the end it became a piece of rubbish, but this rubbish taught me how to be more aware of other people's needs.

Bertha LUK as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

What kind of 'rubbish' are you most reluctant to throw away?

By 'Dance Training and Performance Practice Programme' members

I can't bear to throw away the shirts, trousers, and skirts that I used to wear when I was smaller and that made me feel so pretty. Everyone's got their favourite shirt that they wear almost all the time without thinking about it. Sadly, that shirt grew tighter and tighter, and the sleeves got shorter and shorter until I could no longer lift my arms above my shoulders wearing it. Bit by bit, it moved from the front of my wardrobe to a collection hiding at the very back. When I started decluttering, I saw that it was really shabby both in terms of the feel of the material and how it looked, so I was too embarrassed to give it to someone else. In the end, I had to steel myself to just bin it.

——Vanessa LUNG as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

Any 'rubbish' that you're not willing to throw away will not become rubbish.

—— Cherry PANG as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

If 'rubbish' is something that no longer has any use in the world, then many of the things we throw away in our daily lives do not qualify. If I have to say one thing, then it would probably be the stuffed toy turtle that stayed with me while I was growing up and lived next to my bed! This rubbish, that my parents threw away, contains the innocence and tears of my childhood; it knew all my secrets about me, no matter big or small.

— Candi TSANG as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

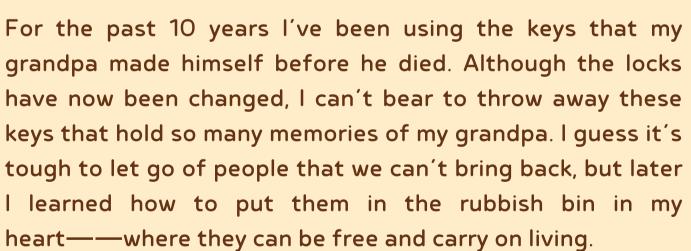

What kind of 'rubbish' are you most reluctant to throw away?

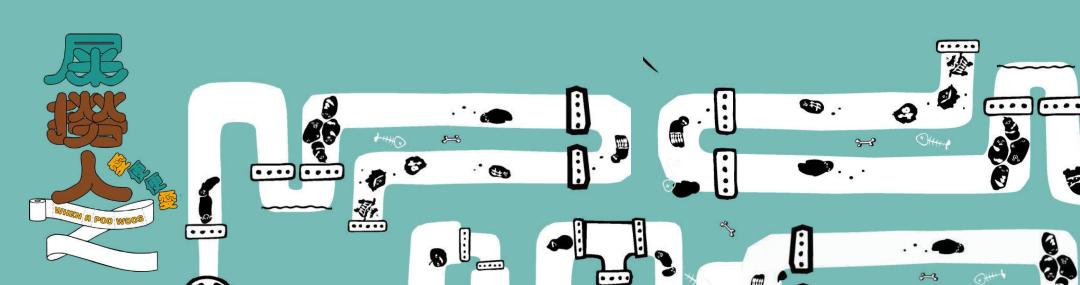

When I was a kid, I loved Ultraman and so my parents got me an Ultraman bike. I rode it until I could ride a two-wheeler. When I got older, I couldn't use it anymore, but I kept it for a few years because I couldn't bear to throw it away. But in the end, we had no choice with the Hong Kong property prices sky high. We eventually got rid of the bike when we moved house. Now I only have photos to remember it by.

—— Joyce WONG as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

—— Clarice YIP as Fast Food / Big Stinky Farts / Detergent Army / Seabird

What is rubbish to you? What's the most useful 'rubbish'?

By 'CCDC Junior' secondary school students

Rubbish—people and things that have lost their value. I think that everyone has become 'rubbish' at some point when you give up on yourself. When you give up, then you lose your self-worth. The most useful kind of 'rubbish' is also yourself. Who can overcome adversity and find themselves? You can.

Edwin CHEUNG as Waffle / Little Poo-men

I think food waste is the most useful kind of 'rubbish'. Food waste can be turned into fertilizer and then after putting it in the soil, it provides nutrients for plants so that we can have beautiful flowers or delicious fruits and vegetables.

 $^-$ Jeannie CHEUNG as Waffle / Little Poo-men $^{\circ}$

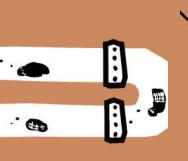

I think rubbish are things that we can no longer use. I think that every kind of rubbish is useful, different kinds of rubbish have different lives, uses and meanings. We need to observe and investigate for ourselves in order to discover them first.

Venus CHO as Waffle / Little Poo-men

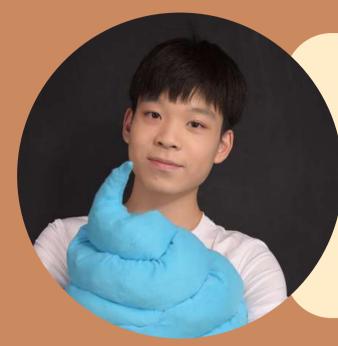

N

What is rubbish to you? What's the most useful 'rubbish'?

By 'CCDC Junior' secondary school students

I think the most useful kind of 'rubbish' is talking rubbish, because it can make a boring situation a bit more fun and make it a bit less awkward when two people don't know what to say to each other.

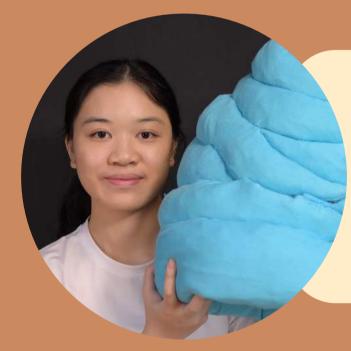

Owen HO as Waffle / Little Poo-men

Actually, rubbish cannot be classified as 'most useful' or 'least useful'. A lot of useful 'rubbish' is overlooked by people in today's society. Just like water bottles, we throw them away once we've finished drinking. But actually, they can be decorated and used again, or even there are people who use dung as fertilizer. So, there are lots of uses for 'rubbish', it's just that we overlook them.

——Iris LAM as Waffle / Little Poo-men

Rubbish is something that we throw away when it's thought to be useless. I think food waste is the most useful kind of 'rubbish', you can compost it and use it for feed. For example, you can feed it to pigs or mix it with manure to make fertilizer.

—— Katrina LEE as Waffle / Little Poo-men

According to the dictionary, rubbish is waste material or could be used to describe somethings worthless or useless. The most useful kind of rubbish are those people and things that are mistakenly thought to be worthless..... like: Excreman!

—— Hailey YIU as Waffle / Little Poo-men

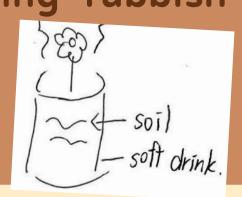

What is the most interesting 'rubbish'

By 'CCDC Junior' primary school students

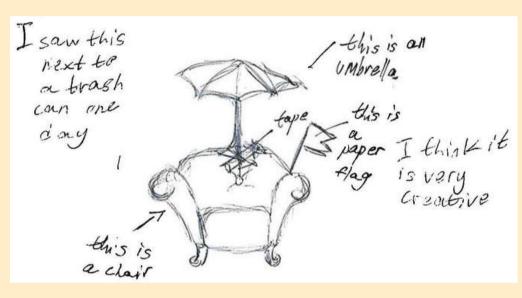

The most interesting 'rubbish' I've seen are soda cans. Once you've finished drinking, you can clean them and then use them to grow plants.

You can also take a few things like glass jars and cans and make music by hitting them with a stick.

(A lot of street performers do this)

By 'CCDC Junior' primary school students

Yoyo KWAN as Cupcake / Little Poo-men / Fish

Homework is the most interesting 'rubbish' I've seen. Why do I think that? It's because our teacher gives us homework to do, which is made of paper. Paper is made of trees, and finally when we finished all our homework in that grade we throw it away, so that in the end it becomes 'rubbish'.:)

—— Chloe LAM as Cupcake / Little Poo-men / Fish

Paper is the most interesting 'rubbish' I've seen because even though used paper is thought of as rubbish, you can recycle it into clean white paper. It's like a never-ending cycle, and that's extremely interesting.

Timea NGAI as Cupcake / Little Poo-men / Fish

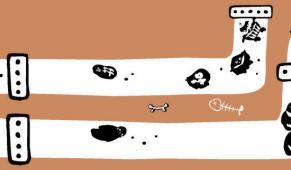

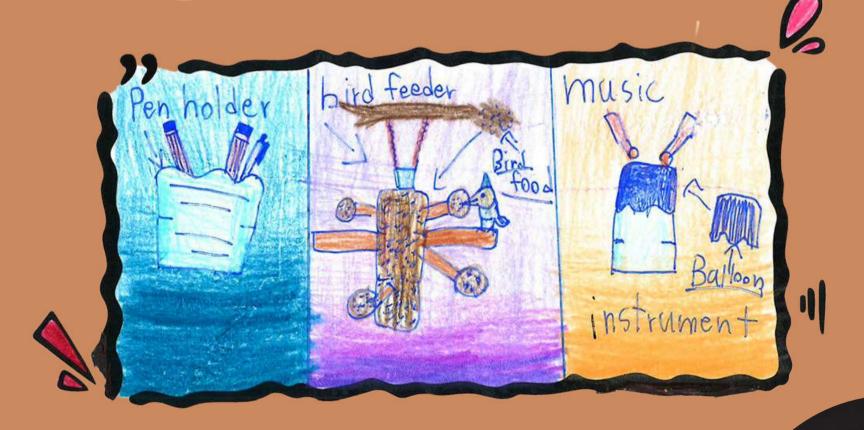

What is the most interesting 'rubbish' you've seen? Why?

The most interesting 'rubbish' I've seen are fallen leaves, because they're the same as people. They go through the same cycle of life, turning into 'rubbish' in the end. But what 'they did' doesn't turn into 'rubbish'. Each leaf helps a tree to survive. We should learn from leaves and help others more while we are still alive.

—— Rochelle TSE as Cupcake / Little Poo-men / Fish

I think plastic bottle is the most interesting rubbish, because we can recycle and upcycle it. We can also make use of our creativity to turn the plastic bottles into many useful things and save the earth!

—— Rona TSE as Cupcake / Little Poo-men / Fish

What is the most interesting 'rubbish' you've seen? Why?

An aluminum can is the most interesting 'rubbish' I've ever seen, because they can be bent into any shape, such as rectangular, square and round.

— Chloe WONG as Cupcake / Little Poo-men / Fish

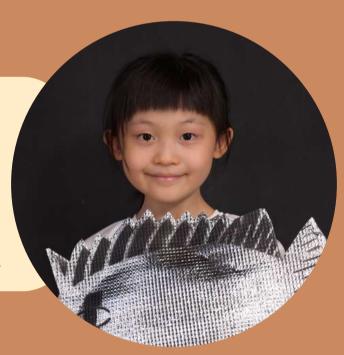

The most interesting 'rubbish' I've seen is clay. If you're not careful it will hang over the side of the rubbish bin.

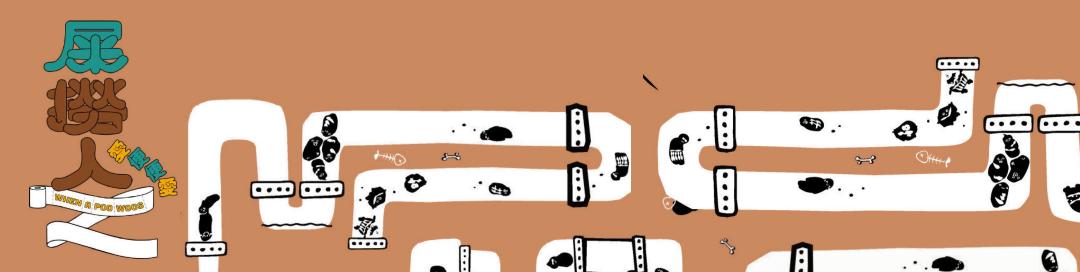

—— Shirley WU as Cupcake / Little Poo-men / Fis

Cardboard is the most interesting 'rubbish' I've seen, because it can be used to earn money and as a toy. It has so many uses yet people think it's just rubbish.

Please share a thing or an experience you think is your biggest 'poo' (failure). How did you face and overcome it?

By Creative Team

When I was in primary school, I had to jump rope for a test in a PE class. Everyone had to jump 10 times without a break in order to pass. At first, I couldn't even clear the rope once, but after two weeks of practicing every day during break-time, I was able to jump 20 times in a row during the test.

—Music Arrangement Siu Tung

I really can't think what my biggest 'poo' is, because the road ahead is always covered in little bits of "poo". There's no such thing as a perfectly clear, flat road.

It's hard to say how best to face or overcome it, or whether to just simply change your mindset. All emotions, sorrow, joy, love or hate, will eventually pass, enriching your experience in some way or other and fueling your progress, so you can go the next mile and set foot on another road that's got a bit less "poo" than before. Just like Excreman in the story.

Set and Lighting Design Lawmanray

I needed to make all the different roles in Excreman look realistic, so I kept trying out abstract and realistic approaches. Too realistic looked boring and old fashioned, but too abstract and fantastical didn't match those characters in Excreman. We often failed in our experiments between real and abstract, sometimes too abstract, other times too realistic. Finally, we found a balance between the two, such as food waste, Excreman and Miss Poo. We think that we reached the best balance we could.

Costume Design YEUNG Chin

П

What was I thinking at the moment I failed?

Everyone told me I wouldn't be able to do musical theatre actor because I sing off key. But I enjoy music and listening to beautiful melodies. I used a different approach by communicating with the music. I feel the music and I let the song move me. One day, my acting instructor told me that I had a good feel for music, and I should just let my voice flow freely. That time I didn't sing a beautiful and moving melody, I just used my real voice to communicate with others.

If you could change your perspective and use another way to deal with setbacks, you can succeed!

The topic I chose is "What does my Excreman look like". My Excreman does not have a specific shape, he can change shape. He meets different kinds of 'poo' creatures in the drains, such as soup or sauces from instant noodles, fish bones or little grubs that have been flushed down the toilet 🐪. On the way, he also meets a fly who falls in love with him and they get together and carry on meeting all different colours and kinds of 'poo'. Excreman is able to keep looking for his field of roses not only because he is driven but also because he has a band of friends that support him. It's only when we have that that we will be able to not give up on our dreams of a rose garden.
